The Vikings

The Vikings lived more than 1,000 years ago. They came from Norway, Denmark and Sweden. They are famous because of their sea journeys to countries a long way away. They attacked many countries in Western Europe. Often they stole everything and burned whole villages and towns. Everyone was afraid of these red-haired fighters. They also went to look for trade and new lands to live in, even to countries as far away as North America.

Viking boats were called longships. The Vikings made their longships with wood, and these ships were very fast and strong. Each ship could carry about 80 Vikings. The men rowed and sailed the ship for hundreds, sometimes thousands, of kilometres. When a very important Viking died, the people buried him in the ground in a longship, with a lot of beautiful things, such as gold and silver jewellery, armour, and drinking cups.

Viking families made their houses from wood, stone, or grass and soil from the ground. There was a hole in the roof to let out smoke from the cooking fire. During long, dark nights of the northern European winter, the Vikings told stories about their heroes, gods and great warriors. These stories were called sagas.
